

Although I was certain that Posner's claim to have discovered Garrison's allegedly missing files was a deliberate lie, after ~~reading~~ reading his chp Garrison chapter I made an additional check of Posner's end notes. For this chapter he has one hundred and fifteen. ~~Most~~ cite published sources. Of the remainder most are to his own interviews and the Wegmann file. There is not a single word in this chapter, or anywhere else in the book, that is attributed to or can come from any such files files of former Shaw lawyer Wegmann, made available to Posner by his daughter Cynthia.

Edward

In short, this is still another of Posner's brazen lies.

= Can it be believed that With <sup>a</sup> Garrison ~~was~~ Posner's preferred betex noire he would not have used a single word of those alleged files if he had them?

Obviously not.

Especially because of their content, of which I know something from having copies given to me or having been asked for comment on them. Posner could have had a ball!

And he doesn't. He falls far short of what with any decent research or inquiry he could have written- and doesn't.

In short, this is another of Posner's brazen lies.

It is a lie he had no real need for, other than in coniving promotions for his book without regard for trusty truth.
