

ABA Chief Says Courts Will Protect the Press

Robert W. Maserve, chief of the American Bar Association, said today that the courts will protect the press from any attempt to curtail its freedom. He said the courts have always been protective of a free press despite a decision by the Supreme Court last term granting reporters a constitutional right to withhold the identity of their news sources.

Maserve, president of the American Bar Association, said the "track record" of the courts has, on the whole, been protective of a free press despite a decision by the Supreme Court last term granting reporters a constitutional right to withhold the identity of their news sources.

Maserve, president of the American Bar Association, said the "track record" of the courts has, on the whole, been protective of a free press despite a decision by the Supreme Court last term granting reporters a constitutional right to withhold the identity of their news sources.

becomes a dangerous thing in the eyes of those who see it. It becomes a dangerous thing in the eyes of those who see it. It becomes a dangerous thing in the eyes of those who see it.