Dear Harold,

Sending you additional materials via third class, including another copy of the Sixth Circuit opinion.

Danaher and Bissell appear to be members of the same club, the Hartford, although because of a possible typographical error, I cannot be certain. The Bissell I remarked on to you last Tuesday is not the spook but his son.

R-TV Rep. had an interesting neighbor: Operations and Policy Research, Inc., run by Max Kampelman and Evron Kirkpatrick.

Hunt's David St. John book One of Our Agents is Missing, copyrighted in 1967: "She shrugged and turned her high-cheekboned Hepburnish face." (p. 9) This may be just coincidental, but it recalls to mind the explanation of the origin of the name of the fictional author of Farewell America from the French ~~for~~ phrase "j'aime Hepburn" for I love Hepburn. I know you've suspected De Vosjoly of being its author. It is inevitable that De Vosjoly and Hunt knew each other and probably must have worked together at one time or another. Could they have collaborated on this as one of the book projects Hunt directed from the vicinity of 17th and Penn.? Thereis perhaps one other hint--the title is reminiscent of Hemingway, whose writing style Hunt tries to emulate.
