

NEW YORK TIMES

ACLU Wins Supreme Court Ruling on Police Surveillance

The Supreme Court has ruled in favor of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) in a landmark case concerning police surveillance. The ruling, which was announced on Monday, states that the government's use of wiretapping and other surveillance techniques is unconstitutional unless it is based on a specific and articulable suspicion of criminal activity. This decision is a significant victory for the ACLU, which has long advocated for the protection of individual privacy and civil liberties. The ruling is expected to have a major impact on law enforcement practices and the way in which the government monitors its citizens.