Dear Paul,

Some time back we had a phone conversation in which I told you I would speak to someone who was away on an extended trip. After he returned it was not possible for me to see him until yesterday, when I was in New York. Most of the time there were others present and I felt I should not discuss this with him except alone.

At one point we did have a brief interval and I did.

Because of the long delay, I had been able to think this over. As soon as we had finished talking a few things suggested themselves to me. I raised them with him.

Briefly, the idea itself is quite viable. The two things that most disturbed me I did get to raise with him. He agrees it should be done sympathetically and that the timing for it is not now but later, if you have not changed your mind.

Perhaps we may again have a chance to discuss this in some detail, if you would like.

If I did not tell you, I have ordered some Commission documents for you. They have not arrived. When I get them I'll send them, unless I have done it already and have forgotten. However, whenever you get this, if you have any questions, anything you'd like checked out further, let me know. If I can I will.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
