Ruby role in guns studied

Nightclub owner worried about gunrunner

By EARL GOLZ

Jack Ruby was concerned that the name of a gunrunner for anti-Castro Cubans might come up during his 1964 trial here. The Dallas News has learned.

The name of the gunrunner, Thomas Eli Davis Jr., didn't surface during the trial, but Ruby's attorney

Ruby in the Dallas area constantly except for trips to Houston, New Orleans, New York, Chicago and Edna, Texas, during the period Aug. 2 to 7, 1963.

Both Davis and Ruby said they had met several times before the assassination and discussed gunrunning as a lucrative business, but each of them

Ruby the "removal of the President" gets "a little out of perspective because if you will recall that back in the early 1960s and late 1950s we were on very good terms with Castro."

Ruby attorney Melvin Belli of San Francisco told The News gun running
