

Warren Panel Member Disagrees With Some of the Findings

New JFK Assassination Probe?

The clamor for a new investigation into the assassination of John F. Kennedy seemed certain to increase today with the disclosure that one of the members of the Warren Commission disagreed with some of the panel's findings.

Sen. Richard B. Russell (D., Ga.) became the first commission member to publicly disagree with the report and its findings when he said yesterday he was "not satisfied with some of the answers" it gave.

In a related development, Texas Gov. John B. Connally, who was wounded seriously at the time of the assassination, scheduled a news conference at his Austin office to answer questions about the investigation.

DIFFERS

Gov. Connally has differed in at least one respect with the Warren Commission report — that dealing with how many shots were fired. He believes he was hit by a different bullet from the first slug, which passed thru Mr. Kennedy's neck.

The commission's contention was that the same bullet hit Mr. Kennedy and Gov. Connally.

Speculation over the timing of the shots fired at the motorcade in Dallas Nov. 22, 1963, has led to suggestions that Lee Harvey Oswald may have had an accomplice, or that a conspiracy was involved.

Sen. Russell, in an interview with the Atlanta Journal, agreed with Gov. Connally in rejecting the "single bullet" theory, but upheld the commission's findings that Oswald acted alone.

The Senator said that tho he was "not completely satisfied about the completeness of some of the answers the commission was compelled to make its report was based on the evidence before it and not on speculation, rumors and questions."

NO OBJECTIONS

He said he had no objection to the appointment of any number of new investigating commissions, but he added:

"I am of the opinion that in the absence of additional testimony any of these commissions — whether composed of leaders of the American Bar Association, the Congress, or any of the other groups suggested — will come to the same general conclusion."

But other commission members willing to comment said they saw no need for a new inquiry.

One, Allen W. Dulles, former CIA director, told UPI: "I don't think a new investigation is warranted. There's no new evidence to consider."

Chief Justice Earl Warren, who headed the panel, has been quoted as saying that the findings were valid. And House GOP leader Gerald D. Ford (Mich.), who also served on the commission refused to comment, but a source close to him said the findings were as valid today as they were two years ago.

HALLOWED SPOT

Meanwhile, yesterday in Dallas crowds gathered to mourn President Kennedy, on the anniversary of his death three years ago.
