Dear Harold,

For the past weeks I have been thinking things over and rereading some of your last letters to me. I decided to write again, I hope you don't mind. As you said to me that I waste your time, I now know that you were right. I am sorry that I asked questions that upset you and I am sorry that I didn't take your criticism as help and not as an act of being mean. I ~~am~~ truly am sorry.

I wish I could see you in March when I go on my spring break, I guess the reason why I can't is my fault. I still hope that Leavelle will speak with me.

Regardless what Livingstone says about you, I still think you are the most honest one. I am sending along Livingstone's last letter, For the record I am not going to answer his last one. I think he is full of it!

I ~~am~~ would still like to purchase Frame Up from you if you would sell me a copy. I do not know how much it costs. I have been following what has been going on about James Earl Ray, I would like to read more.

In these last words I would like to tell you again that I am sorry again and I did not want you to be mad at me. You were a good friend and a major help to me and my work. I am trying to do the right thing here, would you please accept my apology? I wish you would. Please say hello to your wife and my mom says hello too.

Take care,

Cal Schoonover
