Memo for Mr. Rankin

From: Mr. Stern

Do not believe this draft at all precluded by draft response to Dillon letter of 1/20/64. This letter simply accepts Secret Service offer to complete narrative summary of events of 11/22/63. No narrative of events subsequent to assassination was included in Secret Service report to avoid delay in furnishing report on events up to assassination, but we should accept Secret Service offer to have complete report. Request would not appear to involve highly classified information of sort dealt with in Dillon letter.

MEMORANDUM

TO : Mr. Berlin

FROM : S. A. Stover

SUBJECT: Second Interview with SAC Dauch, Chief of Protective Research Section

On Tuesday, March 26, 1964 I met with SAC Dauch and Inspector Hollay at FBI offices from 10:00 A.M. to 12:30 P.M. We covered the following:

Dauch joined the Secret Service in 1930 immediately upon graduation from college and has served in the Secret Service ever since. He was originally assigned to the Washington, D.C. field office; under then Secret Service Personnel Office; from 1952 to 1957 he was in charge of all Treasury law enforcement training, including Secret Service training in June, 1957 to become head of FBI.

Mr. Dauch has prepared an organization chart of FBI which he will have available when he testifies before the Commission. There are five Special Agents who evaluate and prosecute leads, but their decisions as to whether or not to investigate a case are reviewed by Dauch or his assistant, Chester Miller.

Investigations are always conducted of persons who call at White House gates, whom they are interviewed by Secret Service Agents. Investigators are also always contacted with respect to subjects called to the attention of FBI by other agencies. Judgment is exercised with respect to leads developed through the White House mail room and White House telephone operators, which represent the great bulk of FBI leads. The White House staff is instructed to refer to FBI any communications that are in any way threatening, derogatory, obscene, or sexually pernicious. FBI has written criteria for the use of its own employees in evaluating leads from the White House mail room and also has written criteria for all Secret Service Agents on unadmitable gate visitors. Leads are also developed in the field by local Secret Service offices on information received from citizens and from local law enforcement agencies. No written criteria exist to determine whether such leads should be pursued, but all Secret Service agents are carefully trained in the FBI standards in the course of training programs. All Treasury

Law enforcement officials are similarly advised in the course of Treasury Law Enforcement Training Programs and periodic formal Treasury law enforcement coordinating meetings.

FBI is also quite careful not to interfere with the rights of citizens to communicate with the President and to complain of grievances. Frequently, Lewis or Miller determine, or approve a determination, that although a communication warrants creating a file on the subject, no investigation is yet warranted. Instead, the file is watched to see if further signs develop of potential danger. In the past two years there have been 115 instances in which files have been set up for residents of Texas but no investigation has been initiated. Mr. Bouck is preparing summaries of a sample of these 115 cases for the Commission. By contrast, in this same time period, some 30 - 40 cases were investigated involving residents of Texas. FBI has prepared summaries of all of these cases, covering events up to November 22, 1963. I suggested that these be revised to show briefly the actions taken since that date, so that the Commission will not get an incorrect impression as to FBI practices.

Bouck will put together a memorandum which sets out statistics on all FBI cases during the past two years, and on all cases involving Texas residents, with detailed summaries of illustrative cases.

We talked again about FBI's understanding with other federal agencies as to the kind of information FBI desired. Bouck has prepared a list of items of information about Oswald which he believes the FBI to have had before November 22. He is firmer than ever that this information clearly indicates enough of a threat to the President to have warranted the FBI's advising DDCI. Indeed, Bouck now says that the letter to Connally alone, in which Oswald says that he will use all means to right the injustice that had been done him, was sufficient reason for Oswald to have been called to the attention of FBI.

SUBJECT: Interview of Secret Service SA Lawson on Thursday, March 26

SA Lawson was interviewed from 3:00 to 6:00 P.M. on Thursday, March 26, 1964. Also present were Inspector Tom Kelley and Treasury Deputy General Counsel Robert Smith.

Mr. Lawson is 35 years old; a graduate of Buffalo University in 1949. From 1949 through 1959, he worked in various sales capacities, except for the years 1953 to 1955, during which he served in the U.S. Army in Counterintelligence.

He joined the Secret Service in October, 1959. He served first in the Syracuse office from 1959 to 1961, during which period he served a three week special White House assignment in November, 1960, attended Treasury Law Enforcement School in April - June 1960, and Secret Service School in January - February, 1961. He became a member of the White House Detail March 3, 1961.

All members of the White House Detail do advance work for Presidential trips. A new agent begins by assisting more experienced agents and eventually undertakes greater responsibility. In the past two years, Lawson has done advance work for about ten cities, and was the senior Special Agent for about five of them. When not doing advance work, Lawson's duties are those typical of members of the White House Detail.

The Secret Service prefers to have at least two agents perform advance preparations. In the case of Dallas, since President Kennedy had scheduled visits to five Texas cities and had also scheduled visits to other parts of the country immediately before the Texas trip, there were not enough Secret Service Agents to permit two agents to be assigned to all the advance work. Consequently, Lawson did the advance alone from November 13 to November 19, when he was joined by SA Brent, who was arriving from advance work on the President's trip to Florida.

Lawson has done five memoranda on aspects of the Dallas trip.

(1) Preliminary survey report of November 19, 1963 (Commission Document #3, item 11). This interim report on the advance work was completed on November 19.

(2) Memorandum of November 23, 1963 (Commission Document #3, item 12, tab 9a). This brief report on the actual events of the assassination was written immediately upon Lawson's return to Washington on November 23.

(3) Final survey report of November 30, 1963 (Commission Document #3, item 7). This was completed on November 30 and is the formal final report prepared on the activities of a Secret Service Agent entrusted with advance preparations for a Presidential visit.

(4) Memorandum of December 1, 1963 (Commission Document #3, item 12, tab 9b). This was completed on December 1, in response to instructions to prepare a full report on all events of November 22, 1963.

(5) Memorandum of December 3, 1963 (Commission Document #3, item 12, tab 9c). This was completed on December 3, 1963 in response to instructions to prepare a full report on all events from the time Lawson was assigned to the Dallas trip until the arrival of the President at Dallas on November 22.

All of SA Lawson's reports are based upon his recollection as refreshed by sketchy daily reports and miscellaneous papers. The daily reports do not constitute a diary but merely a brief account of the number of hours worked.

Lawson's story is as set forth in his memoranda, with the following additional information:

Before leaving to do an advance, an agent checks Secret Service files for recent advance reports on the city involved, for leads to special problems. There were no reports of recent trips by a President to Dallas.

The final selection of the Trade Mart as against the Women's Building, was made, as far as Lawson knows, by a Mr. Bruno of the Democratic National Committee. Lawson had examined both buildings and had not indicated any preference. Each building presented certain security hazards, and each offered certain security advantages.

Lawson is confident that had there been strong reason to prefer one of the buildings, his recommendations would have been given great weight.

The motorcycle route was worked out by Sorrels and Lawson with the Dallas police. Given the Trade Mart destination, and the decision to spend about 45 minutes en route, the route selected was the only appropriate route. This would not have been the case had less time been allotted to the motorcycle. As far as Lawson is concerned, the Rowley letter of March 26 to the Commission, describing the selection of the motorcycle route, is accurate and complete.

Lawson designated press areas at the Trade Mart and at Love Field. These were approved thereafter by a White House press officer. The travelling press already had received press credentials; local press credentials were distributed by the local committee. Tight Secret Service control was not required, since possession of press credentials would not entitle anyone to entry to an unprotected area close to the President.

Regarding the determination of potentially dangerous individuals in Dallas -- Lawson checked with FBI before leaving and was advised their files contained no subjects in the Dallas area. Upon arrival in Dallas he checked with SAIC Sorrels regarding the local situation. It is Sorrels' responsibility to conduct liaison with local law enforcement, including local FBI, and apprise the advance man of any potential problems. Once a subject is identified, it is the responsibility of the advance man to assure that appropriate precautions have been taken. In this connection, and in every other matter affecting the advance preparations, the advance man is considered the representative of the SAIC of the White House Detail, with authority to direct the SAIC of the local office to do anything considered necessary.

Lawson would not describe the advance work for this trip as different from the typical advance preparations for a "political" trip as distinguished from, for example, a trip to a military installation where security controls are much easier to establish.

We then covered the actual events of the accommodation. Mr. Eggers may wish to interview Lawson on three points.

Lawson was riding in the front seat of the lead car where the advance man always rides to regulate the speed of the lead and pilot cars and maintain the necessary distance from the Presidential car.

The lead car is usually 40 to 50 feet ahead; at this point it was 70 to 80 feet ahead.

Lawson looked up and saw the first explosion, which the lead car was about to pass underneath. He saw about five persons on the overpass above the Elm Street thoroughfare. These persons seemed to be dressed in workman's clothes. There was a uniformed policeman right with them. Lawson noticed to the group to move off the overpass. He did not observe any unusual movement on the overpass, but in accordance with standard practice, strict instructions had been issued to keep all such overpasses clear.

He was signalling to the group on the overpass when he heard the first noise. He describes it as a sharp report, louder than the usual sound of a rifle; then there was a pause, followed by two more noises, closer together. At first Lawson thought the sound was that of a firecracker. The first report came just as the lead car was entering the underpass. When he heard the sound, he turned and looked behind the lead car. He is sure that the report came from behind and not from the overpass. Since he first took the sounds to be that of firecrackers, when he turned around and noticed people moving on the grade slope next to the thoroughfare, he assumed that one of them had set off firecrackers. Then he noticed a Secret Service Agent in the following car standing with an automatic weapon in his hand, and realized that something serious had occurred. He then thought that perhaps the sound had been the firing of the automatic weapon. The Presidential car then accelerated rapidly, and came close to the lead car before the lead car also accelerated and instructions were received to proceed to the nearest hospital.

We then discussed with SA Lawson events in which he participated during the detention of Coughlin.

Mr. Lawson recalled that while he was at the airport, sometime between 2:15 and 2:35, he received a call from the Dallas police station reporting that a suspect had been injured. Then, along with Chief Curry and others, he proceeded to the police station. They arrived at about 3:30 or 3:45, having been impeded by heavy traffic. Agents Grant and Lawson proceeded to locate and join Agent Sorrels in the homicide area of the police station. Lawson recalls that police headquarters was in a state of chaos, that he spent most of his time running from room to room in an effort to gather facts to plane in to Washington.

The first time Lasson observed Lee Harvey Oswald was at about 5:00 P.M. in Capt. Price's office. In addition to Cartolo, who handled the interrogation, several other field agents and several police officers were present. Lasson recalls that this period of questioning lasted only "a few minutes" and that only general data -- name, address, recent biography -- was covered. Lasson stated that Price's office was "a fairly large room" (about 3/4 the size of Adm-Spector-Storm's office), and that outside the office there was a crowd of approximately 100 press representatives, including men with television and movie cameras and microphones. Lasson stated that Oswald was, during this period, wearing "handscript clothes" and had a bruise on his face. Lasson has no recollection as to whether Oswald was handcuffed.

Early in the evening Lasson spoke to Mr. Legrande and his employer (?) concerning the filing of the association.

Sometime during the evening, Lasson recalls, a man who had been sitting through a window of the same School Book Repository Building came into the police station. A line-up was staged for his benefit, but the witness, although he stated that he thought Oswald was the man he had seen, refused to make a positive identification because he previously had seen Oswald's picture on television. Lasson claims this line-up took place sometime between 9:00 and 10:00 P.M., and does not recall noticing any irregularity in it.

Late in the evening Lasson, as well as Agents Patterson and Kelley, was present in the stamp room for Oswald's "press conference." He recalls that the room was full to capacity. Prior to Oswald's appearance, Mr. Hale announced that Oswald had been charged with Tippit's slaying, and Chief Curry briefed those present as to the ground rules of the press conference (stand back, ask any questions you want, etc.). Lasson believed that one of the questions directed at Oswald was something like "Did you shoot the President?". However, there was no such noise in the room that neither Lasson nor Kelley heard anything Oswald said. It was the impression of both Lasson and Kelley that Chief Curry arranged for the press conference because he wanted to let the public and the press see that Oswald was not being held incognito or mistreated.

Lasson recalls that the remainder of his time was spent in deciding when to return to Washington and what evidence he should take with him. He departed for Washington early Saturday morning.
