

Ford Acts To Meet Author

By Carroll Kilpatrick

White House Press Secretary Ron Nosenko yesterday said that efforts are under way to arrange a meeting between President Ford and Russian writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn. Burton informed Capitol Hill sources that the famous author had left Washington and was expected to return to Solzhenitsyn is still in the United States and plans to remain here for several weeks before making his first trip to his country. He was described as a "friendly" person, and the American people are pleased to hear that he is coming to this country.

Mr. Ford continued his efforts yesterday to persuade the House to ease the congressional ban on arms sales to China. He invited 30 members to a breakfast meeting where he outlined the Secretary of State's position. Last week, the President gave a breakfast for 100 House members. He will give another breakfast for the remainder of the House members this afternoon. The Senate repealed the ban and the House is scheduled to vote on the repeal measure next week.

Mr. Ford continued his efforts yesterday to persuade the House to ease the congressional ban on arms sales to China. He invited 30 members to a breakfast meeting where he outlined the Secretary of State's position. Last week, the President gave a breakfast for 100 House members. He will give another breakfast for the remainder of the House members this afternoon. The Senate repealed the ban and the House is scheduled to vote on the repeal measure next week.