Dear Mr. Weinberg,

Thank you for another entertaining letter: at least the correspondence is contributing to fresh understandings. I had no idea of the speed with which American publishers work until I heard that John Sparrow had, following the publication of his article in the T.B.S., been approached by an American publisher who not only arranged to print the article as a booklet (the copyright remained John Sparrow's), but also arranged to fly him to New York for publication.

Later on this month I am publishing a reply to John Sparrow by Eric Lane. There is still time for you to send us a printable letter on this subject if you wish to compile one.

Yours sincerely,

Arthur Crook
