Simpson upped to ad director Warner Far East

Joyce Simpson has been promoted to director of advertising and publicity, Far East, for Warner Bros. International.

Simpson has been manager of that division since 1986. She will continue to report to Rick Markovitz, vp of international theatrical advertising and publicity.

Simpson's new responsibilities will include supervising the studio's advertising and publicity activities in Hong Kong, Indonesia, Taiwan, Thailand, Singapore, New Zealand and the Philippines. She will also work closely with Markovitz in helping to supervise ad/pub activities in Australia, Japan and Korea.

Simpson joined Warner Bros.' international division in 1986, after a stint as an account executive at Ogilvy & Mather. She is a graduate of Temple University.

Test

These days, distributors are starting to be more discerning in how they conduct test screenings. Not every American success translates well locally.

Distributors are also starting to use test screenings to generate local interest feature articles in newspapers. For "The Silence of the Lambs" last year, Orion invited a selected team of psychologists to discuss the effects of criminal patterns in Singapore.

This year, there were similar media screenings for "JFK" for political science lecturers and medical practitioners for "The Doctor."

"If there's negative response to a particular film, then we have to re-strategize our advertising and publicity campaign," said a publicist for a major exhibition chain. "Trends change continually — and in this business, no one's quite sure what works and why. There's no science to it."

Although a major summer success in America, "City Slickers" failed to elicit popular support here. Most moviegoers mistook the film for a western, a fact which was emphasized by the Chinese title translated as "The Cowboys."

Conversely, the erotic content of "The Unbearable Lightness of Being" was so strong a draw that the film has now become the longest running film in Singapore, ousting previous record-holder "Jaws" (HR 4/21).

The real test will be Paramount's "Wayne's World," with characters drawn from television's "Saturday Night Live," a show which has never been broadcast here. — Melissa Tan
