

Five Indicted in Cuba Embargo

NEWS 7/11/64
NEW YORK, July 10 (AP)—Four men and a woman who allegedly conspired to break the Cuba embargo by attempting to ship more than $1 million worth of locomotive and auto parts to the communist island were indicted yesterday by a Federal grand jury.

The government claims the exportation, a violation of the Export Control Act, was to have been accomplished by using false shipping documents indicating their ultimate destination was France and other Western European countries.

Actually, the machine parts were destined for Cuba and were to be shipped under a general export license which does not cover shipments to Cuba because of the embargo, according to the U. S. Attorney's Office.

The parts were to be used in repairing American-built locomotives in Cuba.

The indicted were identified as Pierre Contresty, 64, a citizen of both the United States and France, and his wife Madeline, 40, residents of New York; John J. Kallmann, 50, a New York accountant; Jimmie Lee Jones, 38, of San Mateo, Calif.; and George Bailes, 30 of Castro Valley, Calif.
