JCS Pleas For Callup Rejected

Testimony Reveals Chiefs Also Sought Emergency Action

By John G. Norris Washington Post Staff Writer

Repeated recommendations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for a callup of reserves and declaration of a national emergency were rejected by the White House, Gen. Harold K. Johnson states, because of the "shivers and tremors" this would create around the world.

Johnson, Army Chief of Staff, disclosed in testimony released by the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee yesterday, that the JCS had recommended unanimously, last spring, last fall and again early this year, some recall of reserves and the declaration of an emergency permitting troops to be kept in uniform.

The Army chief said that for his part he was glad the Administration rejected the callup that he and the other chiefs had advocated.

The Army's reasons for proposing such a reserve call and retention of forces were of fered by Gen. Johnson in the same testimony.

"I recommended it for two reasons," he said. "First, it would decrease the turbulence within the active Army, and second, it would increase the speed with which we could have units available for deployment."

Johnson went on to say, however, that he not only recognized the President's reasons for rejecting the military recommendations, but felt now that such a reserve call no longer is necessary. A callup of selected reserves could be useful, he said, but is no longer urged by the Army

Army. While accepting a "status of vulnerability" earlier, he acknowledged that "in retro-spect" the decision of the I President was in the national interest. The military leader See MILITARY, A12, Col. 1 the military proposal.

Monday, June 20, 1966 THE WASHINGTON POST A12

MILITARY—From Page AI

LBJ Rejected Pleas For Reserve Callup

"This is because the declaration of an emergency and -States would send shivers and tremors throughout the world," Johnson declared. "The policy of the Commander-in-Chief, announced no wider war."

Johnson said in testimony given the Stennis subcommit- States." tee behind closed doors May 3 and 4, he was not recommending any recall of the Army Reserves, despite the fact that some special skills would be useful to the active Army at this time. He made it plain, however, that he once strongly favored meeting the Vietnam objective by calling reserves and declaring a national emergency that would have frozen men now in service in current jobs.

"May I give a very simple analogy on calling the reserves and not calling the reserves," Johnson testified.

"It is just about like going to Baltimore on the Baltimore Parkway or by taking Route 1," he said. "It is easier to go on the parkway and you have a lot of red lights and relatively contricted traffic on Route 1. Now, had we called the Reserves, it would have been course he preferred. Johnson needed to deploy 16 divisions noted that he had recommend- and provide the basis for ed the recall of the reserves, further expansion of the Army. but noted that such a step would have "transferred the that there would be no reserve turbulence" from the Regular callup or emergency declara-Army to the "civilian sector of tion, he said, it became neces-the society." some of the society."

manding general of the Con- to provide forces for Vietnam tinental Army Command, testi- and for expansion of the Army.

said he understood why Amer-Ified that he believed that "we ican civilian chiefs rejected have passed the point that a callup of most types of reserves would be of help to us."

Gen. Johnson said that a the mobilization of a power- year ago military chiefs made ful nation like the United an evaluation of the over-all threat facing the United States. Based on that evaluation, he said, "I concluded that in the face of United States and allied strength, the USSR would remain essentially nonbelligerent within the In his Johns Hopkins speech immediate time frame and last April 7, said that we seek that we could, without undue risk, reorient temporarily the At the present time, Gen. mission of assigned certain divisions within the United

This decision, Johnson went on, permitted the JCS to conclude that the Nation's "Strategic Reserve could tempo-rarily be used for two other purposes than designed: (1) to provide trained manpower for Vietnam and (2) for train-ing "a greatly augmented input into an expansion of the active Army."

Sen. John C. Stennis (D-Miss.), chairman of the Preparedness subcommittee and James T. Kendall, chief counsel of the group, sharply questioned Gen. Johnson on his testimony.

Statements by Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara and other Pentagon chiefs last summer that the Army had "16 combat-ready divisions" available for action overseas was repeatedly put under fire.

Gen. Johnson stated that he and other Pentagon chiefs meant that there were 16 grmy a parkway trip. The way we division forces ready only if are doing it, we are fighting the President called ap the our way through the traffic of Route 1." San Thurmond (R) Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-vide support units, training S.C.) asked Johnson which divisions and other forces

When the President ruled Gen. Paul L. Freeman, com- the 16 Regular Army divisions