any comparison of this aspect of US needs with Russian capabilities - This is a reversal of the "missile gap" argument. If the Russians would produce more missiles than we had / regardless of whether they had them or we needed them) we had to produce more. If we, under Kennedy, increased our conventional arms & forces, would not the Russians be ~~tempted~~ & tempted to do like wise & feel just if we in do doing? What has this out of things stop. And it is worth noting that these things Sch. singled out to the needs the Kennedy administration decided it needed - like more super-sonic planes, were not what they ultimately needed for anti-guerrilla war, as far more since should they have told them, again how did this influence USSR's policy?
