Cuban Exile Manuel Ray Among & Held by British

By Dan Kurzman Star Reporter

Cuban exile leader Martuel Ray, who had promised to land in Cuba by May 20 or die in the attempt, was one of eight men captured by a British destroyer on Monday at the Bahamian island of Anguilla Cay.

A United States Coast? Guard plane was involved in the capture, though American officials maintain that its only role was to relay a radio message from the Destroyer Decoy ordering the Cuban boat to halt.

Whatever the U.S. involvement, many observers saw in the United States and Ray's spread belief among Cuban ashore. exiles and diplomatic observers that he was.

our help-tell them to jump in the lake?"

can photographers who were group. He has no declaration ing there now."

the British under the name of Manuel Martinez, almost made it to Cuba on May 22, according to one report, but his launch sped back to the Bahamas after being detected by a Cuban gunboat.

Ray and two other Cuban exiles were captured on the it an element of irony. Both island by a Decoy landing party after five others, including the two Americans, were Revolutionary Junta had said caught in the fleeing boat. It that Ray was not receiving is presumed that the craft American support. But there was heading for Cuba, though nevertheless had been wide- it is not clear why Ray was

Some Latin American diplomats here said that Ray's One U.S. official appeared prestige probably would not to regret Ray's capture, say-suffer as a result of his failure ing, "Well, what could we do to get in by his May 20 deadwhen the British asked for line since he was captured apparently while trying to get in. Ray's pledge had created Andrew St. George of Life an electric atmosphere of hope magazine, one of two Ameri- in Miami's large Cuban exile community that an effective captured, told the press in Cuban underground would Nassau: "Yes, Ray was in our soon emerge.

Police sneaked "Martinez" to make now. He will make off the Decoy yesterday after no statement until he arrives his seven companions were in Cuba to join the under-taken off openly and sent to ground forces who are fight-magistrate's court for trial. When Ray himself entered the Ray, who was booked by courtroom, surrounding policemen shielded him from the view of newsmen.

The magistrate fined each of the prisoners $14 for illegal possession of firearms and dismissed charges of illegal entry into British waters.

Immigration officials then took charge of them. It is not clear how long they will be held.

The second American photographer in the group was Thomas Dunken, who formerly worked for the Tampa Tribune and the St. Petersburg Times in Florida.

A State Department spokesman said that the Coast Guard plane was on a "routine patrol" when it "came across" the chase. He said the aircraft received the destroyer's "halt" message by radio and dropped it near the boat in a corked block of balsa wood marked with a red flag.

Ray's craft, which was loaded with arms and ammunition, was finally captured after a 12-mile chase when the Decoy overhauled it.