a hard-to-climb mountain and the hardest way, beginning with all starting spending of some of the most ruthless characters in modern history, was a serious misjudging of his adversary, he surrendered all his triumphs without taking a trick, for he was confronting a man who had faced & overcome really serious threats all his life, & from men he never meant them.

After this conf. with a change in Kennedy, he held no mystery for Khrushchev. He was like the girl who stopped before ~~the~~ the boy she sought to captivate, removing her fabrics, and padding, placing her false teeth in a cup & answering a ~~torment~~ woman's effect. He knew what was behind his fabrics & padding. He took out about to go to war over the birds of dump he pushed. Ed. about.

I see no exit we must left, all he could do was use the union big as a club.

And you don't get to the alter that way!
