

How the Tehran Paperbacks Got Here

The wolf eats him who makes himself a lamb.

— Bartolomeo Vanzetti

Bartolomeo Vanzetti's adage has become a motto for journalist/activist William Worthy, 60, who has made it his business for a quarter-century to tread where others dare not, particularly in those areas where the American government would prefer to see less, rather than more, press coverage.

When the government searched the luggage of Worthy and two colleagues last month and seized paperback books published in Iran, complete with reprints of classified U.S. documents taken from the U.S. Embassy there, it was not Worthy's first confrontation with the government.

On Christmas Eve, 1956, Worthy, on leave as a Neiman fellow at Harvard, slipped across a bridge from Hong Kong to communist China, ignoring a U.S. ban on travel.

According to later testimony, his shortwave reports from Peking for CBS conflicted with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles's position that communism in China was a passing phase whose demise would be hastened by refusing to recognize the government of Mao Tse-tung. The State Department asked CBS and the newspapers for whom Worthy was reporting to bring Worthy home. Although CBS relayed the request, Worthy ignored it and stayed for six weeks.

When Worthy did return, the State Department refused to renew his passport without a commitment that he would abide by the travel restrictions in the future. Although Worthy was defended by a coalition of scholars and journalists during a series of congressional hearings, the denial of the passport was upheld by an appellate court.

In October, 1960, six months before the long-delayed Bay of Pigs invasion, Worthy reported from Havana that Cuban officials expected to be attacked by Cuban exiles supported by the United States. Later in 1960, a second showing of "Yanki, No!", a television documentary about Fidel Castro's Cuba on which Worthy worked, was canceled under pressure from the State Department.

In October, 1961, Worthy returned from his fourth trip to Cuba, where he had reported that the Castro government was not unpopular and failing as described by the Kennedy administration. Still without the passport the government had refused to renew in 1957, he was tried and sentenced to jail.

In 1964, his conviction was overturned by a federal appeals court that declared the travel restrictions unconstitutional. Worthy was traveling without a passport through North Vietnam, Cambodia and Indonesia.

In February, 1980, Worthy, then a professor of journalism and Afro-American studies at Boston University, and Randy Goodman, now a visiting lecturer at the University of Lowell, Mass., accompanied a 46-member U.S. "grassroots" delegation to Iran. At the time, although there was no ban on travel to Iran, the State Department was doing nothing to encourage travel there.

In September, 1981, with equipment and expense money from CBS television, Worthy, Goodman and sound technician Terry Taylor returned to Iran on 10-day visas. Extending their visas over six weeks, they managed to conduct more than 70 interviews with Iranians ranging from the clerical hierarchy to shoppers on the street.

At an airport on their way to Shiraz, they purchased sets of the paperback books they had heard described by militants at the embassy. They purchased additional books at a downtown Tehran bookstore.

When the three left Iran on Nov. 27, 1981, they shipped the books with their regular luggage in two batches on Luftansa airline.

Customs officials regularly single out items from Iran for special drug searches, according to Luftansa agent Jack Boylan. When they saw a batch of paperback books, several of which have reproductions of classified documents on their covers, they decided to call in the FBI. The FBI confiscated the documents.

But the second batch of books had not been inspected by Customs when it arrived in New York City, so the journalists had another copy of the volumes, which form the basis for these reports.

— Scott Armstrong

ism, at times the Israelis have carried the fight to Arab terrorists by taking executive action against them, especially in parts of the Near East and Western Europe. In particular, the fact that Lebanon has a mixed Christian, Druze and Moslem population has made that country attractive for intelligence projects. The Israelis have covert assets and run operations in their northern neighbor. In the past they have mounted paramilitary and executive action operations against Palestinian terrorist leaders, personnel and installations in Lebanon."

The report also discloses a previously undisclosed coalition of Near East," the survey says. "A formal trilateral liaison called the Trident organization was established by Mossad with Turkey's National Security Service (TNSS) and Iran's National Organization for Intelligence and Security (SAVAK) in late 1958. Since the original agreement there has been an addition to Mossad's bilateral relationship with each service"

By agreement with the Turks, Mossad has undertaken to furnish information on the activities of Soviet agents in Turkey and those working against Turkey throughout the Middle East, the survey said.

and police training, arms sales to national military forces, and aid and development programs." They have continued to have good relations with intelligence agencies in Kenya, Zaire and South Africa, and in West Africa have provided training in Liberia and Ghana.

• Latin America: "The Israelis have been very active in Latin America over the years," according to the report. "Recently, much of their liaison activity in Latin America has centered on training and antiterrorist operations. The Israeli Consulate in Rio de Janeiro, for example, hou.

lega
dori
com sonr.
who or of
TI
ment
pion respo ning
opera stalle eratio
tap t
with teleph possib
ploys
At a
to the olation
Emerg
give pe portati dents t tain ar original
Arabs
used la commur

"The
telligenc
the Va'a
ry functi intelligen home and

"The V
rector of Military I Shin Beth
police, the Ministry f
rector of t
Planning (C
Foreign A
military, ir
ist adviser
. . . . Meeti
ly but may
At these m ally provide activities of preceding tw Mossad cha capacity is d prime mini Va'adat are and the ter

gence) tried to pen-consulate general in gh a clerical employe an affair with a Je-they rigged a fake most the employe in effort to recruit him.
tempt at blackmail,
to get the Israeli girl from her boy-

een two or three to recruit Marne ary reward," the he Shin Beth has aidate and black-
the United Na-rvision Organiza-

lden microphone aelis was discov-
of the U.S. Amviv," the report phone taps were two telephones
the U.S military microphone was the wall plaster in office of the Op-
he Jordan-Israel Commission Of-

"plays a key entific exchange
to the report, raelis devote a
of their covert ing scientific and This . . . inntrate certain jects in the er western nat to penetrate in order to tion. Despite Israelis fresetbacks and d cases where ts of Ameri-

th have been U.S. author-

pared to cap-
kind of agent says, includ-
al to Jewish ivities, pro-
anti-Semitism,
and human-mail is also techniques
money, busielease from have used