I find a letter like yours of the 25th, despite what from your point of view is certainly intended as understanding and patience, deeply disturbing. So much so that while I's awakened at 4 a.m. to be able to complete one of the last and a complicated chapter in my Watergate book, The Unimpeachment of Richard Nixon, I've laid it aside because I'll not be able to concentrate at least until after I've responded.

Without taking time to correct types.

I have long been aware that I come accross like a self-conceived lympian. There was a time when those of whom I was fond and we much younger than they had to be to be my children used to consider this avuncular.

But if you want what I believe to be the truth, it is not at all that I have this enormous self-concept. Self-assurance when I set out on something, yes; with a long substantiating record. But I do not regard myself as some kind of genius. All this would be so such easier if I did or could. The truth is more unflattering to you.

I appear to bethis way and to seem this way because there is so permeating an i competence in the filed, and in no case of which I know is the incompetent that in the rest of his life. I probably referred to political infantilism. It is true. Not of people who are in other areas impature or politically impature.

It is true that to really obtain any kind of mastery of the unquestionable fact of the political assassination more effort than almost anyone will invest in his lifetime is required. I'd say that I have put in more time and effort that more than 10 PhD's would require and there is so much I don't know!

But it is not true that this kind of time investment is needed to see through your former friend Trow or Farewell America or so much more you seem to take at face value. People don't analyze any more. All have preconceptions and with enough selfconfidence and enough imagination all can see what isn't there and be certain of it.

I had some advantages over anyone else (almost) in knowing FA had to be a fake because I was cognozant of its first pretendedly clandestine surfacing. I tend to apply simple tests. Tenerality. If I look out the window and see rain falling I don't have to wonder. But if I'm told the water is voluntarily running uphill, can I not?

Those matters about which I have been in disagreement with others in the past have almost without exception been elemental. It was frustrating beyond conveying to try to tell you the feeling when I knew that good minds believed stale horseshit. Er that others, also bright, were not also dishonest, sick, self-serbing or a combination.

The surest way to unpopularity is being consistently right. The surest thing in my mind is that only political immaturity (where there was also honosty) blinded all others to what in all cases was too soon true. Not genius on my part. Prevailing stupiditys blindness, immaturity, or oj this subject an inability to think things through, to be logical, even reasonable.

You kid youself often, including in this letter, as describing Woodstein, both of whom I know, as "Two dumb kids who didn't have their feet on the ground." They are not dumb, they had their feet firmly on the ground, and they were -confidential - bribed with leaks to them. I have written this, long ago, from my own experiences to begin with. You are not in contact with the real world. And I remain essentially naive and trusting, odd as it may seem.

Your problem is but that you lack inside knowledge. It is that you can't discriminate. Btween what is reasonable and possible and what isn't; between what can and can be expected to be counterproductive and hurtful and what probably won't be.

I also hold other views you may find simplistic. When I seam the political horizon I have considerable difficulty finding politicains who today are better for the country than Teddy Kennedy. Fuck his past. His present counts. But if you take the worst possible view of his past, can it begin to be as bad as those who were part of so many countless murders and mainings throughout the world, esp. in SEAsia? So why badger him? Six Beriodically in the past I'd drop a note, saying it required no answer, to his AA, named Martin. I am sure all were unwelcome. But I gave good information and advice with the probability of correctness so great I recall no error. I have never been in his office. I don't think your college mate, Drayme, would either trust me or talk to me. I'm not sure I want to take the time, either, because the prospect of being really listened to is so slight. But I guarantee I could blow his mind, if it is not locked closed, and that I d say nothing about having even epoken to him.

Tire is another factor that selves no as impatient as I am with inquiries like yours to which I reacted so strongly. You didn't learn from True. How same hot irons meed burn your hands? There are my shows to be walked in, too.

I am 61. I've lived 10 of the most hollish years on the work of which you know and 20, of which 10 coincide over what you would not believe is a novel. Our femous farming operation was ruined by low-flying helicopters, with disaterous and continuing results. By wife is as conditioned as Pavlov's dogs. And as impocent. It was also financially ruinous. I borrowed $500 for a down-payment to the printer on my first book. I've not been able to finish mying him for the last because of the fortune out of which I've been appead on all of them. It could not be a more organized operation if it had been organized. I've never been out of debt in all this time. As I've been able to collect some of that is used as - and I would not declare bankruptcy - I've paid my debt off. It is not something like 97,500 only, about $ 20% of what it was.

At this point I was interrupted by a lawyer who is asking an effort to collect more than 34,000 a single wholesaler eves me, plus interest.

We live below the poverty level, on two days as ministrage income my wife has each week, plus the small income from books that in effect I continue to borrow from the printer I've not been able to finish paying off. In short, even a stamp is a real cost to us. At my age, and with 5 neutain acres, I now by hand with second-hand nowers, when as currently I have pulled a susale and when a had back and arthritis and bursitis don't malos it ill-advised.

But I presist. I sue, I research, I write and only infrequently as I abed after 4-4:30 a.m. I gut in a day that would kill west people I know in an effort to complete what I think you can recognize as one of the largest tanks a non has ever undertaken. I ask nothing on anyone hand I got nothing except plight help in the form of codes from a few friends). I have at least six books well started, more researched and read for writing, some going back to 1965. I do what at any tipes seems to hold the possibility of being most useful.

In short I got at an intensity of which few men are capable and after leng, long years of it, trying to be productive, trying to accomplish what a might be, trying to get things on paper and trying to asswer questions from people all over the world because I recognize their mincerity and feel an obligation to meet their convince desires. It is rare when one is considerate enough to isclude a return-addressed envelope. This while broke and past 61. Can you understand my intolerance of what is really thoughtlessmess, people like you not using your heads to really try to think things through and asking me to spend time doing their thinking?

None of this takes into account an except of work, often daily, you would not believe possible to get whore we are on the kay case, without a cent coming in from it and without all my expenses being paid. We were the subject of an exhaustive tax audit. The autidot simply couldn't believe that I would travel accross the country m go down to New Crimans, over the Dalius, back to M.O. and then come home and pread loss that $100 on myself in 30 days. Would you live this way? Or be tolerant when you have for years to be able to cope and to be able to work?

So, try my shoes for a while, David, and try stretching your own mind a bit, independently. What you swallowed from From should have made you vomit before he gave you a partial emotic. You stuff on Farewell America will make you ashamed if you are as bright and alert as I think you are. Sure you want ensure, and you should have them. So do countless others. But how much of this can one aging, tired, overworked and broke one man supply and do anything else, including not losing his patience?

Hello Harold,

Sorry I disappointed you. I apologize for my ignorance, but not for asking questions. My reason for writing you was to ask questions and seek advice. I do appreciate what you told me.

No, I do not understand a lot of things. But, I do not feel that is something for which a person is to be put down. I am not too proud to admit I am not the smartest person who owns a typewriter and I am not afraid to admit I am very ignorant of many things. I also do not pretend to have a great deal of inside knowledge. The very fact that I know I am ignorant is why I ask people for help.

I sent out four letters to four people asking basically the same things. I got three replies to date...no concensus. Yours is the most humane RE: The Family. You are probably correct. I don't know. Now, I liked your line about the other fellow's shoes. Cute. Good advice, though.

Sen. Kennedy's PR man is a person I knew in school. I had a long talk with him. No, I cannot answer for Sen. Kennedy. I do know how I would feel if JFK had been my brother and the events had happened to him the way they have. That is what throws me, I guess.

Sorry for the shock about the family connection to FA. If asking questions about something I don't know as fact or understand qualifies me for your nuttery, Harold, your allowances are too damn critical. My point, if one gets all sorts of statements and charges given as fact--which I have been receiving--how does one learn things except by asking? I am sorry my asking upset you, but, I am not surry I asked you. How in hell does one learn things otherwise? You see, I respect your opinions and thoughts. That is why I asked your help before going further with this.

As to the stuff about my not knowing what is real and unreal in politics. Balderdash. Harold, ANYTHING is possible! Two dumb kids who didn't have their feet on the ground much less a strong sense of ethics found that out. No comparisons...I am simply saying there is room for dummies who have to ask questions to learn "facts." You come across in your letter like someone who sits "up there" with nothing more to learn. I don't think you feel that way. No one should.

Naw, I'm not really angry. I just react honestly. I also admit the shortcomings that seem to be so obvious.

I will reserve judgement on FA until I have more gact. As for the story on it, that, too, will have to wait. No hard feelings, I hope.

Cordially (really)
