Pearson said some Canadians believe the country should not foin the organization, which includes most countries of the Western Hemisphere, because at the present time we are very popular."

Canada has turned down membership in the OAS in the past to avoid involvement in Latin American problems and possible conflict with stands taken by the United States.

"Perhaps we were wise in not hurrying into the organization," Pearson said. But now, he said, the Canadian govern-ment is "examining the possi-bility of joining the OAS with sympathetic interest."

Murrey Marder of The Washington Post reported:
