November 26, 1967

Dear Friends,

Now that I have cleared up the accumulations of my absence, I cannot get back to writing without first stopping long enough to write you an inadequate letter of thanks for all your kindnesses.

I don't think I have ever been away from home and felt as much at home.

Possibly because we have not been blessed with children I appreciated yours more. They were a delight! I have never seen a family that lived together as well, as comfortably and considerately.

Not because I saw more of him but because of what I saw of him and I full of respect for Marc. He is a rare young man, mature beyond his years, responsible, thoughtful and considerate, concerned - in every way a beautiful young man. He is already a worthwhile, contributing member of society. Aside from his many courtesies, it was a joy to be with him.

I am looking forward to seeing all of you again, I hope soon.

The West has not changed. The media are still corrupt. The Washington Metropolitan station suppressed the Byrd Show with me on it! They dragged up a show that is a year old and used it instead. My wife bet me, as soon as I got home, that this would happen.

Stations that aired the films on the other side and refused me the opportunity to defend myself, I learn, aired the newest man, one who while pretending to criticize the government actually has evolved a formula that is designed to get the government off the hook and still deny us the truth. What a dishonest world it is back here.

Again, my thanks for your wonderful kindnesses.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
