

HW:

Ramparts is still going, and appears considerably more stable than it did during Warren Hinckle's tenure.

They have an excellent article, for instance, in the December issue on Henry Kissinger, quite the most illuminating I've seen.

I can't say whether anyone reads them any more, but, have the impression that they have concentrated on increasing subscriptions in the past two years rather than on street sales.

Also I have no idea whether they pay anything. If they do, it probably wouldn't be much.

Their present editorial office is at 2054 University Ave., Berkeley, 94704, phone (415) 849-4771. Their publication notice says unsolicited manuscripts must be sent with stamped, self-addressed envelope to insure return, and carries the usual statement that no responsibility is assumed for unsolicited material, and that second copies should be retained by the writer.

11/3-Wild idea, and I have no agent, and I'll be making an effort elsewhere, but I've just finished about 6,000 words of a proposed statement to Sen. Jud. vs Powell only partly indicated in WW 77. I do not think they will find it welcome. It should appear in some form because it says much about the concern of the top bar brass on the most elemental legal rights and the futility of any, even white, unpopular defendant expecting anything. If it is used it will be public domain. But it may be and be ignored and it may not be. Does Ramparts pay anything at all? Does anyone read it any more? I'll be sending you a copy.
