

To the FBI, no matter how wrong J. Edgar Hoover was he was always right.

Before the Warren Commission he testified that "some people have raised the question: Why didn't he shoot the President as the car came toward the storehouse where he was working?" Hoover's explanation is that trees obstructed Oswald's view. In my first book I published a Secret Service photograph taken from the so-called sniper's nest of the approach of the presidential limousine to show that the one place in the entire area that had no trees is the place Hoover said they were. (Page 201)

To prove that Hoover was always right, even when he was wrong, the FBI prepared a memo of "proof": ~~XXXXX~~ "Why didn't the assassin shoot prior to the car turning left off of Houston Street?" Weisberg commented that Mr. Hoover answered this by saying: "There was a tree in the way"; however, according to Weisberg, there are no trees on Houston Street. Weisberg is completely off base on this point" because after the motorcade "turned left off of Houston Street," there are trees.
