

Dear Ed,

8/21/81

To a large degree your questions of 8/14 are rhetorical. I don't have time for a long answer, but when you ask, "can we trust the evidence..." I say that to a very large degree we can. There is fault recollection, there is disinformation (and this includes Lifton) there is simple inaccuracy, but there also is quite much of the corpus delicti that is dependable. What I have in PM still stacks and will. What I've just done in a very long (112 pp) affidavit, with 82 exhibits will stack and may even have some impact, if it can get any attention.

The FBI agents did not say missile. This was the language of the receipt typed up for them to sign by a Navy corpsman.

Thanks for referring to The Magus. I'll have a friend check the local libraries.

Best wishes,

8/14

Dear Harold
mail ~~is~~ is over.

My real question
is: Can we trust
the evidence to be
in fact "The Evidence"?

Walker denied the
"Walker Quill" was
the Walker Quill.

Tomlinson could not identify the Magic Quill and O.P. Wright denied it was the Quill he found.

The drawings of

And there is no
chain of evidence.
Humes and Spinger
very unusual Chest
photographs were taken

Navy denies it.

Why say "missile"
when you "mean" fragments?
Amal Guinn's "discovery"
was the fragments!

Read The Magus, a famous novel by John Fowles.
You will enjoy it and
note the parallels.
