Trading lives with a total stranger.

What's it like to have someone else's job . . . take someone else's lovers . . . actually live someone else's life? Nancy Weber is a 31-year-old writer whose classified ad in The Village Voice got several responses, one of which materialized into THE LIFE SWAP. Nancy and Micki exchanged everything, and the explicitly documented true account of their experiences has already become a pre-publication sensation among New York's publishing and movie company insiders. Beginning in May (after an appetite-whetting excerpt in Viva) you can count on THE LIFE SWAP to create a sensation everywhere else as well.

THE LIFE SWAP
BY NANCY WEBER

LET'S SWAP LIVES. Woman writer, 31, will exchange her joyful, productive existence with yours for a month. I offer small Village apartment with fireplace & courtyard; size 8 wardrobe starring St. Laurent and Levi-Strauss; 1,000-plus books, fine paintings, Bach, tennis racquet; sterling friends & loving lovers, not all of whom are married. I'll do your work, adore your family, see your shrink, whatever, wherever. Why? I want to know if people can get out of their skins. References, lawyers, all safeguards both ways. Box A 3240, VV, 80 University Place, NYC 10003.

His strongest novel since 'The Manchurian Candidate.'

Richard Condon's new novel of assassination and conspiracy is bizarre, mysterious, outrageous—and as unpredictable as America itself these past ten years. The family of President Tim Kegan is forced by a deathbed confession to reopen the investigation into his assassination. Condon's narrative trail leads into the presence of oil kings, movie queens, corrupt police, the CIA, organized crime, and other phenomena of American life. The result is a stunning addition to the legends of the death of princes, a breathtaking suspense novel with as shocking a climax as 1974 will provide, and a book that could surpass even The Manchurian Candidate's bestseller sales.
