IN MEMORIUM
ROSE REMEMBERED 1890-1995
MOTHER FOR A GENERATION

ROSE KENNEDY, the mother of President John Kennedy, died in January of this year after living for 104 years. The question bears asking, "What was it about this woman that so inspired her children to reach for such heights?"

Mrs. Kennedy was a product of her upbringing and the expectations of her life as a wife and mother. The women of her era and standing were expected to rear the children, run the home, dress beautifully for society, and be a smiling adornment for their businessmen husbands. In their spare time, they were the backbone of volunteer life charity and church committees. If this was the measuring stick for women of the 1940's, Rose Kennedy certainly met the mark. Life magazine's writer, Brad Durnach, writes, "A tribal matriarch as formidable as the reawilded dam of the Bonapartes, she bore and nurtured America's most dazzling political dynasty. Yet she saw, one after another, five of her nine children—three of her four sons—struck down in a family tragedy as grim as any Shakespearean contrived. For all that, Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy does not deserve to be remembered as a mourning Madonna or as the aged recluse of Hyannis Port..." I agree.

Comments about Rose Kennedy:
"If Rose had been a boy, she—not Jack—would have been the first Catholic President," says family friend Marie Greene.
"She was the glue that held the family together." John Kennedy
"I would rather be the mother of the President than the President." Rose Kennedy had once about herself.

We will never know if she would have been greater at politics than her sons or daughters, however, we are confident remembering her as the finest mother for them all.
