

nightfall by godfrey kirkpatrick great darkness schrouds the city her lights glistening at a distance from the surrounding hills shadows dance and play in the dirty streets the sound of tambourines and laughter glides laughingly across the darkness of the night the idlers in the cafes drink deeply stars glitter in the inky darkness of the sky, a begger importunes the passerby in the street below my window nightbirds ply the evening breeze their wings soft as felt the heart of the city beats softly she sighs to her self like a lovely woman her soul breathes deeply of the evening breezes lightning plays upon the distant sky and thunder rumbles in the surrounding hills my love puts her head upon my shoulder and whispers that she loves the night