Political Scandal Is a Md. Tradition

By Peter Jay and John Hanrahan Washington Post Staff Writers

About two decades ago, long-established pattern of Maryland was rocked by campaign charges that a close associate of Gov. Theodore Roosevelt McKeldin had demanded a large fee from an engineering company to help get the firm "a large amount of the state's consulting engineering business."

The allegation by Democratic gubernatorial candidate H. C. (Curly) Byrd in the 1954 campaign was never proved and McKeldin was reelected. Last week, 19 years later, Vice President Spiro T. Agnew pleaded no contest to tax evasion charges that, while governor of Maryland he accepted cash payments from consulting engineers who were awarded state con-

In so doing, Agnew said, he was only following "a political fund-raising in the state."

While allegations of corruption usually went unchecked in the 1950s, the current U.S. attorney for Maryland, George Beall, and his two predecessors in the 1960s have had some singular success in tracing such patterns.

They have been so successful, in fact, that Maryland has acquired a reputation for corruption to match that of Huey Long's Louisiana, the Massachusetts of James Michael Curley, or the New Jersey, West Virginia and Illinois of the current era.

Former U.S. Sen. Joseph D. Tydings, who as a federal prosecutor in Baltimore in the early 1960s investigated a scandal-ridden savings and loan industry, believes the state's seamy reputation is undeserved. "These things go on in other places, too." he said recently, "but they have been vigorously prosecuted in Maryland."

See MARYLAND, A14, Col. 1

MARYLAND, From A1

That may be. Certainly over the years, and especially during the last decade, vigorous prosecutors haven't been lacking for work. All sorts of public officials have been indicted, many have been convicted, and a number have gone to jail for crimes committed in office.

Agnew is the first Maryland governor or former governor one congressman, one U.S. in the eral offenses.

Former Rep. Thomas F. Johnson (R-Md.) got caught up in the Maryland savings and private firms. loan scandal and A. Gordon Boone, former speaker of the Both were convicted and land General Assembly, most served prison terms. (Rep. Frank W. Boykin (D-Ala.) was have been prosecuted in realso convicted in connection cent years have been accused with that same probe.)

Last year, former Sen. Dan-legislative duties. iel B. Brewster (D-Md.), Boone's former law partner, executive of suburban Baltimore County, Democrat Dale N. Anderson, is now under licenses. federal indictment on more than 40 counts of extortion, bribery and tax evasion charg-

Though Agnew is immune federal income tax laws. from further federal prosecution under the terms of his negotiated plea, he could conceivably face state charges.

Gov. Marvin Mandel has indicated that Agnew probably will not be subjected to state prosecution. But, if Agnew is, the Democratic Baltimore County state's attorney.

But Green has problems of his own. He is under indictment for bribery (including soliciting and accepting "carnal bribe"), embezzlement, larceny after trust, perjury and misconduct in office.

Political corruption in Mary. land has, over the years, fallen into several categories.

Sometimes, as in the Agnew case, it has involved the payment of eash to public officials by those seeking state contracts. Often it has involved land: its sale, taxation and zoning.

The atmosphere for corruption has been enhanced by the to be charged with serious state's rapid growth, over the crimes, but in recent years last two decades particularly suburban counties senator and a former General around Baltimore and Wash-Assembly leader in Maryland ington. The growth meant have been convicted and sen-land development and major tenced to jail terms for fed-public works projects - highways, bridges, tunnels-that in turn, meant state and county contracts and big money for

Though rumors of bribes and payoffs fill the corridors House of Delegates did, too. at every session of the Maryof the state legislators who of crimes unrelated to their

Last May, however, former Del. Leonard S. Blondes was was convicted of receiving an convicted on state charges that house in Annapolis, many legunlawful gratuity in connec- he demanded and received a islators never pay for drinks tion with third-class mail rate bribe from a lobbying group, when lobbyists are around. legislation. His case is under the Montgomery County Bowl- The lobbyists also buy dinners ing Proprietors Association for for legislators. Agnew's successor as county his efforts to try to change the law to permit county bowl- General Assembly spent $900,ing alleys to have

A federal grand jury indicted Del. James (Turk) Scott ficial records. on narcotics charges, but Scott was never tried. He was shotgunned to death in a Balti- the lobbyists who spend the more basement garage.

Baltimore state senator named tive—but it is certainly useful the prosecutor in a state case Frank McCourt was being in elections. could be Samuel A. Green Jr., held in New York on narcotics Gov. Mandel has already

A. GORDON BOONE THEODORE R. McKELDIN

Maryland political scandals of the past swirled about leagues in the Senate worked 1974 re-election campaign. feverishly to raise bail money (Since the news of the Agnew and get him back in time to investigation became public kill a bill to outlaw pinball- last summer, Mandel has machine gambling. (As it hap-promised to return about $40,pened, McCourt returned to 000 received from contractors Annapolis in time to vote, but who do business with the then declined to do so, blam-state.) ing adverse publicity. The bill passed—by one vote. McCourt ing has been done by three was later acquitted.)

Money and politics are thor-Rodgers III and W. Dale Hess. oughly entwined in Maryland, as in other states.

When the General Assembly is in session, it is almost impossible to avoid lobbyists. In

This year lobbyists at the beer 000-$10,000 a day and an average of nearly $5,000 per leg-This year, State Sen. Clar-islator—to try and influence ence M. Mitchell III, a Balti-the course of legislation. One more Democrat, was indicted lobbyist, James J. Doyle Jr., on charges of violating the received $66,000 for his efforts, during the 90-day legislative session, according to of-

Money may or may not be useful in Annapolis-though most usually have the reputa-A few years ago, while a tion of being the most effeccharges, some of his col- raised about $900,000 for his

Much of Mandel's fund raismen: Irvin Kovens, Harry W.

Kovens is a Baltimore businessman; Rogers, chairman of the board of Tidewater Insurance Agency, Inc., and Hess, a former legislator and Tidewater vice president. All are wise in the ways of state Democratic politics and demonstrably competent at extracting political contributions from potential donors.

All three developed as political operatives during the administration of J. Millard Tawes, the old-guard Demoformer Gov. Mckeldin's associate and these legislators.

DANIEL B. BREWSTER

THOMAS F. JUHNSON

crat who preceded Agnew as were for sale. The allegation governor.

Hocker, a keg-shaped lobbyist timore attorney Robert J. Calfor breweries and other inter-lanan. ests who functioned as the gray eminence of the Tawes cutors alleged, and presented administration.

"It was George who got cratic veteran of the statehouse in the Tawes years. the conduit for a $5,000 pay"Sometimes it wasn't clear ment that went to buy a ernor, Adelson was regarded George who was really run-partner, Paul Pitcher, in 1966. ning things. George was the inside man, no question about it."

Observers of that period recall that Hocker had complete ution to the Democratic guber- had a disagreement with an access to Tawes and was the natorial campaign of Thomas opinion issued by the office of man who cleared patronage B. Finan, now a state Court of the state attorney general. appointments. If someone Appeals judge. (Finan was "I don't need the attorney general." wanted to see Tawes person- Tawes' choice to succeed him general," McKeldin is really, the quickest and easiest as governor.) way was to go to Hocker.

surfaced publicly in a 1970 tax With them worked George evasion trial of prominent Bal-

During the trial, the prosetestimony, that Callanan had told federal officials, at a prethings done," recalls a Demo- indictment trial on his tax problems, that he had been M. William Adelson.

> the form of a political contrib-until 1970. ution to the Democratic gubernatorial campaign contrib- published account in 1955, had Pitcher was appointed by Bill Adelson." During that era, the rumor Tawes to a seat on the Anne persisted that state judgeships Arundel County Circuit Court Adelson also shared in a $64,- in 1966. He died in 1968. Tawes 000 fee for serving as bond Pitcher or anyone else.

other Maryland governors mended Adelson for the job. have had their inside men. Although McKeldin was a H. (Bud) Hammerman Jr.

the Justice Department, took candyman." money from contractors at Agnew's request and then di-tain amount of old-fashioned vided it, half for Agnew, a racketeering, mostly in Baltiquarter for former State more, that has left smudges on Roads Commission Chairman the body politic from time to Jerome Wolff, and a quarter time. for himself.

The administration precednew's, Republican. The governor then, from 1951 to 1959, was McKeldin, a former mayor of Baltimore who knew the state's political pathways well.

McKeldin's closest confidant was his former law partner, judgeship for his then-law as the unofficial lieutenant governor, a post that did not The payment was made in officially exist in Maryland

McKeldin, according to a

"I don't need the attorney ported to have said. I've got denied to reporters at the counsel on the state's Baltitime of the tax trial that he more harbor tunnel project. had "sold" a judgeship to The State Roads Commission chairman said then that "the Just as Tawes had Hocker, governor's office" had recom-

Justice Department informa- Republican, Adelson is a Demtion released at Agnew's court ocrat. Since the McKeldin appearance last Wednesday in years, Adelson has continued dicates that when the former to have a strong influence on Vice President was governor, state affairs as a highly such is inside man or one of builders and financial instituthem-was mortgage banker I. cessful lobbyist for utilities, tions, among others. In Annap-Hammerman, according to olis now, he is nicknamed "the Maryland has also had a cer-

Former Baltimore Mayor Thomas A. D'Alesandro III's ing that of Tawes was, like Ag- father-in-law, Dominic A. Piracci, pleaded guilty in 1969 to making a payoff to a labor leader named Guido Iozzi Jr. to insure labor peace on a construction job.

Earlier the same year, Iozzi was convicted of extortion and sentenced to 15 years in prison-after a major prosecution witness was fatally shot in a hunting accident by a marshal assigned to guard him.

More recently, there have been investigations by federal and state grand juries into the uses of land in Maryland's growing suburbs-outside of Washington and Baltimore.

In 1971 and 1972, former Prince George's County Commissioner Jesse S. Baggett and developer Ralph D. Rocks were convicted on bribery charges related to land devel-