

“It is Nixon himself who represents that dark, venal, and incurably violent side of the American character almost every other country in the world has learned to fear and despise.”

—Hunter S. Thompson in:
Fear and Loathing: On the Campaign Trail '72

“The best account yet published of what it feels like to be out there in the middle of the American political process.”—The New York Times Book Review.
 “The literary equivalent of Cubism: all rules are broken.”—Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. “An unnerving glimpse of the adrenalin highs and numb, sullen lows . . . of the most dismal Presidential campaign in living memory.”—Newsweek. “The best stuff on the campaign I’ve read anywhere.”—Nicholas von Hoffman. “Cazart stone outrage, wildly laden with obscene phrases and apocalyptic fury.”—The Washington Post.
 “The most inaccurate and truthful account of the campaign I’ve read.”—Frank Mankiewicz. “Hunter Thompson is the quintessential Outlaw Journalist.”—J. Anthony Lukas. “I don’t know what he’s a doctor of but I’m reasonably sure it’s neither fine arts nor humane letters.”—Harriet Van Horne. “And he is not Theodore White, thank God.”—Kirkus Reviews.
