Nixon Agrees To Reveal Donor

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's campaign money raisers consented Wednesday to reveal the source of a large chunk of previously unreported contributions rather than face a pre-election trial.

A consent decree signed by U.S. District Court Judge Joseph C. Waddy means the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President must identify contributors for most of the period before the new Federal Elections Campaign Act went into effect last spring.

The disclosures are to begin Thursday night.

The committee and its affiliates raising money for the Nixon campaign also were ordered to hand over to the court records of its collections and expenditures pending final resolution of the case, which is expected to continue after the election.

The surprise agreement, in a suit brought by Common Cause, probably cuts off the last chance for a public hearing on Nixon's campaign financing practices before next Tuesday's presidential election.

"They did not want to go to trial," Common Cause chairman John Gardner said after the signing. "I don't think they could stand to have Maurice Stans and Hugh Sloan testifying."

Stans, formerly Nixon's Commerce secretary and now chairman of his campaign finance committee, and Sloan, former financial adviser to the committee, both had given depositions in pre-trial proceedings and were likely to be subpoenaed witnesses in any full-scale trial.
