Dear Mr. Williams,

At the risk of seeming to coal Newcastle, this caution based on this morning's Post's reporting of your request for telephone records relating to homes and offices in the Democrat bugging case.

Hunt at the very least had a place at which he could get calls and mail that would not show in anything the Post Office or ~~the~~ phone company could give you.

If it was his intent to leave no record that could be traced to him, something I think worth considering with his training and experience, then the simplest way would have been for anyone wanting to talk to him to place a reverse call. Hunt would then get the message and could return the call from a pay phone, leaving no record except, perhaps, in expenses accounts. These need not specify what calls.

What I am really saying is that if he knows his business, as I presume he does, you should not be persuaded that the return on the subpoena tells you everything you seek. I would encourage you to the belief that unless he was careless you will not begin to get what you seek.

If you do not figure this out on your own, if and when you get to depositions I think I can give you a few hints that will not violate the confidence by which I am bound.

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
