Vew Democratic Coalition

Evans and Novak, in their column on the 'Anti-New Politics Liberals," have accurately reported on the basic thrust of the new Coalition for a Democratic Majority. I vant to emphasize, however, that those of is who are organizing CDM are not "anti-McGovern" in the sense of any personal intagonism toward the senator, but are opposed to the New Politicians who attempted o use the McGovern candidacy to attain hower for themselves and for their brand of politics.

As a matter of fact, the unkindest cut of ill is the effort of these New Politicians, led y Mrs. Westwood, to blame Sen. McGovern personally for the Democratic national icket's defeat. The fact is that Sen. Mc-Fovern was the same honorable, earnest and incere campaigner both before and after he Democratic National Convention; he vas the same campaigner who had previousy won four of the five elections in which ie had run in South Dakota. The difference vas that the Democratic National Convenion of 1972 had brought the New Politicians nto full public view and that a majority of the American people, who now came to ssociate Senator McGovern with that group, lid not like what they saw.

RICHARD SCHIFTER.

Washington.