

$7 Million Pledged By Nixon Supporters

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three wealthy businessmen attending a small, intimate White House dinner in 1970 pledged $7 million to President Nixon's re-election, according to a confidential report by the staff of the Senate Watergate committee.

The report deals with President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign and the fund-raising efforts of Herbert W. Kalmbach, Nixon's former personal attorney.

A copy of the report was obtained by The Associated Press.

The subject of fund-raising did not arise when Nixon was at the dining table, the report said.

But after the President left, Kalmbach discussed the campaign's financing with those present, including Chicago financier W. Clement Stone, industrialist John Mulcahy and Pittsburgh financier Richard Scaife.

"Stone stated that he expected to give $1 million in 1971, a second million in 1972, and a third million in 1973, if there was a deficit," the report said. "Mulcahy said he would match Stone's performance . . . Scaife said he would give $1 million."

Two other men present, John

Rollins and Kent Smith, later pledged $250,000 each, bringing the total of potential contributions to $7.5 million for the evening, the report said.

There was no campaign deficit and Stone gave only $2 million. Scaife gave his promised million.

Mulcahy, president of the Quigly Co., a drug manufacturer and subsidiary of Pfizer Pharmaceuticals, gave only $600,000. Kalmbach said that was because he had contributed heavily to the 1970 congressional campaigns.

Rollins, president of Rollins International, gave $260,523. The report did not mention Smith's eventual contribution.

The report did not suggest that there was anything illegal about the contributions of Stone, Mulcahy, Scaife, Rollins or Smith.

Over-all, the report said, Kalmbach's fund-raising efforts for Nixon resulted in pledges of more than $13.4 million of which a total of $10.6 million was received.

Kalmbach pleaded guilty earlier this year to violating the federal Corrupt Practices Act by offering ambassadorships in return for campaign contributions.
