

Beneficial Headaches ^{Post} 7.25.74

Vice President Ford revealed recently while speaking of his superb health and fit condition, though he looked quite worn out at the time, that he had never in his 61 years had a headache. This places him in the same ring with my father and Richard Nixon. Thus, I am coming to perceive a new group of extremists on the political horizon: Acheless Republicans for Peace (ARP). But from those I know who would become automatic members I am led to feel that it is of significant benefit, if not an honor, to have had at least one ache in the noodle. However, it could be that presidential counsel James St. Clair will be using that lack of cranium tension as a defense in the President's behalf and thus set a precedent for all future acheless criminals!

KERMIT E. COOKSON.

Vienna.