Dear Barry,

Yesterday, quite by accident, I learned that the Nixon spy machine also used college professors, not just students.

A friend who was here mentioned that a friend of his "worked for Magruder." When I asked the friend's name, he backed off, saying the friend was afraid of what publicity would do for him.

I don't know what his reaction would be if assured that his friend would not be indetified.

Should you desire to follow this up, I can go back to him for you or I will take anyone you might want to send to him.

My local friend is a reputable local businessman who was here to render an emergency service to Ian McDonald, who recently left The Times of London. Ian had inadvertently locked the keys to his car in its trunk.

So, we needed a locksmith.

The enclosed letter to Richardson is FYI.

Sincerely,

P.S. From the number of helicopters I heard returning toward Washington from the direction of Camp David last night, I's expect there was a larger number of people there than news reports have indicated. Some - at least one - flew before the Presidential party.
