

Dorothy Hunt c rash: WBBM radio reported early a.m. that the coroner's examination of the corpses showed that all had enough cyanide in their blood to account for death. He also said it could have been produced by the burning of the plastic in the plane. It appears that the cyanide was introduced by breathing, and there seemed to be an inference that had escape been possible but delayed, the gas could have caused death where smoke might not have. Of course, if the gas was inhaled, the victims were still alive when they inhaled it. HW 1/18/73
