

Notes on People by Laurie Johnston

●
Robert L. Maheu, who directed the Nevada operations of Howard Hughes and last year won a $2.8-million defamation suit against the industrialist, is back in Waterville, Me., to visit his mother. The 57-year-old former agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who recently testified before a Congressional committee about his role in a 1960 scheme by the Central Intelligence Agency to oust Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba, had a message for his home state about the need for preserving the two agencies despite past blemishes: "Make sure we don't destroy our cathedrals, our institutions, just because the stained-glass windows need repairs."
●