

News Guild Tells $900,000 in Grants

WASHINGTON —(UPI) — The American Newspaper Guild said today it has received more than $900,000 since 1960 from five private foundations.

It denied knowingly taking any under-the-table money from the CIA, however.

The Central Intelligence Agency's financing of a wide variety of international activities has been disclosed as having been channeled through private foundations.

Two of those that gave the Guild money are said to be CIA conduits.

TIES UNKNOWN

The Guild's secretary-treasurer, Charles Perlik, said if any of the money the union got from the foundations came from the CIA, he did not know it — and that if he did not, no union officer did.

Perlik said the Guild now is receiving funds from three groups — the Chesapeake Foundation, Baltimore; the Board-Hi Foundation, Columbus, Ohio, and the Warden Trust, Cleveland.

The total received from these, and the Granary Fund, Boston, and the Andrew Hamilton Fund, Philadelphia, since 1960 ran to more than $900,000, Perlik said.

He said the latter two halted contributions in 1965 and the money received from the other three since then totals $615,000.

PIPELINES

Previous disclosures of CIA financing have mentioned complicated pipelines touching the Granary and Hamilton funds.

The other three have not been mentioned, but they declined to discuss their money sources.

The Washington Post said today two Texas-based foundations, each with an officer who is a close friend of President Johnson, have been receiving CIA money.

They were identified as the Hoblitzelle Foundation of Dallas and the M. D. Anderson Foundation of Houston.

U. S. Judge Sarah T. Hughes, who swore in Johnson Nov. 22, 1963, is reported to be a trustee of the Hoblitzelle Foundation.

Leon Jaworski, twice rumored as a possibility for appointment as attorney general, is said to be a trustee of the Anderson Foundation.
