Allended Finds ITT Story Useful

Santiago, Chile

The documents dealing with Chile purported to come from the files of International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. have provided a political windfall for President Salvador Allende.

The 82 pages of documents made public by columnist Jack Anderson picture ITT, which owned the Chile telephone company, as pressuring the United States Government to prevent Allende, Chile's leftist leader, from taking office after he won the presidential election of Sept. 4, 1970.

From election day until Congress ratified Allende's victory October 24, the leaders and newspapers of the Communist and Socialist parties constantly denounced what they said was a plot by the Central Intelligence Agency to keep him from taking office.

The government press and television system are now devoting most of their space and time to the purported documents, claiming that they not only confirm the left-wing charges of 1970, but also show that there is a current CIA-backed campaign to topple Allende.

Many of the papers were the work of a private intelligence unit made up of former newspapermen, most of whom had experience in Latin America, employed by ITT. The company has extensive investments in Latin America in telephones, communications equipment, manufacturing, hotels and car rental.

"The revelations in the United States of the documents should convince every Chilean that the nation's independence is at stake today," said Jaime Gazmuri, a Social Christian leader and supporter of Allende.

ROBERT BERRELLEZ
Confidential report

Wednesday night the government television channel linked ITT and the CIA to the right-wing plot in which General Rene Schneider, then commander in chief of the army, was assassinated Oct. 22, 1970, in a bungled kidnaping.

General Roberto Viaux Marambio and 24 other persons are awaiting sentencing for sedition in connection with the assassination.

One of the purported ITT documents, a confidential report from Robert Berrellez, a former correspondent for the Associated Press, who was hired as a political investigator by ITT, said on Oct. 16, 1970, that "Viaux was told from Washington last week not to act."

"As part of the persuasion to wait," it said, "Viaux was given verbal assurances that he would receive material help and support from the United States."

In an editorial yesterday, the Communist party newspaper El Siglo said that "everything indicates that the CIA has not abandoned its intentions" and that "attempts have been detected to free Viaux" from prison.

The left-wing organs appear to be trying to whip up public agitation against what El Siglo called "the right-wing conspiracy" to overthrow Allende with foreign support.

El Siglo said that the CIA is working against Allende through the conservative National party, the small Democratic Radical party and the military right-wing Fatherland and Liberty Movement.

An immediate result of the left-wing campaign has been the banning by the minister of the interior, Hernan Del Canto, of a previously authorized march today by wives of 2000 workers at the privately owned paper company that produces most of Chile's newsprint. The march was to be in protest against plans to expropriate the company.
