

Plans to Visit N.H., Midwest This Week

Ford to Keep Personal Style

President Ford will embark on two trips this week determined to continue his personal contact with the voters despite last week's attempted assassination in Sacramento.

White House press secretary Ron Nessen, who announced the President's plans yesterday, attempted to minimize reports of concern over the matter of safety and to emphasize the President's comments that he will continue to meet openly with the American people.

Other officials indicated that the Secret Service does not have to be ordered to exercise greater vigilance. These officials suggested that there will be tighter safeguards and subtle and unannounced changes in the pattern the President has followed.

One official said there always will be a conflict between the Secret Service, which wants maximum protection, and the President's political advisers, who want maximum exposure to the voters.

More than two years ago, Robert H. Taylor, chief of the White House Secret Service detail, was ousted from his job following reports that he had quarreled with H. R. (Bob) Haldeman, President Nixon's staff chief.

Taylor and Haldeman clashed during the 1972 campaign, it was reported, because Taylor wanted to keep Nixon at a distance from crowds and Haldeman wanted as close contact as possible.

Nessen said that Mr. Ford will spend Thursday in New Hampshire campaigning for Republican senatorial candidate Louis C. Wyman. The trip will involve a motorcade from Keene to Portsmouth with many stops along the way to support Wyman in the Sept. 16 special election.

The President will return to the White House Thursday night and leave Friday for a trip that will take him to St. Louis, Kansas City, Dallas and Midland, Tex. He will return to Washington late Saturday.

Nessen emphasized yesterday that the President "does not contemplate any changes in his method of travel" from last week's trip to the West Coast.

Nessen also said he knew of no meetings in the White House to discuss security matters.

"From the President's point of view, he plans to continue to get out and meet people," Nessen said. Nessen also said he had heard of no plans at the White House to investigate the Secret Service because of its failure to put a watch on Lynette Alice Fromme, who was arrested Friday after pointing a pistol at the President.

After the Sacramento incident, Mr. Ford addressed the California legislature and later submitted to a taped interview, released last night, with Los Angeles television reporter Joseph Benti.

In answer to questions, the President said he profited considerably from his travels and meetings with a variety of people.

He said that when he shakes hands with people "along the street or when I shake hands with people in a hotel or any other place" he feels a sense of communication that has "an impact on my thinking."

"I think a President, if he wants to do his job well, has to be a part of the people and he has to have the American people feel that they are a part of him," Mr. Ford said.

"That is why I do travel. That is why I do like to shake hands and talk to people. That is why I do like to attend these White House conferences, because it does provide a method of communication... which I think is vital."
