Announcer: Garrison has based his case on the certainty that he can prove Clay Shaw is Clay, or Clem, Bertrand. [The name Clem Bertrand was first introduced by a lawyer named Dean Andrews, who told the Warren Commission a person by that name telephoned him,* suggesting he provide legal defense for Lee Oswald. Three years later Garrison suggested to Andrews that Andrews identify Shaw as Bertrand.]* Andrews said he told Garrison that he could not say if Shaw was or was not ^{CLAY} Bertrand. (In background, unidentified voice: "... Clay Bertrand the same as Clay Shaw." Andrews: "You say I identified him - I don't know if I did or I did not.")

Since then Garrison has taken his former friend Dean Andrews before the grand jury where he has been indicted for perjury. Before that happened Andrews talked with us.

Andrews. Na, I wouldn't know Clay Shaw if I fell across him on the street dead.

- Q. Has the occasion arisen for you to take - to listen to Clay Shaw's voice?
- A. (unintelligible) ... since all this popped up they had him on TV so I just shut my eyes and listen to the voice and that's not the voice.
- Q. Well, are you saying that Clay Bertrand is not Clay Shaw?
- A. I'm saying that the voice of Clay Shaw is not the voice that I identify as Clay Bertrand.
- Q. And you have seen Clay Bertrand on two occasions?
- A. (unintelligible) ... two times. recent - ?
- Q. You have seen Clay Shaw's picture in the news - ?
- A. Since this happened, many times.
- Q. OK. Can you say positively that the person you knew as Clay Bertrand is not the person you have seen as Clay Shaw?
- A. Scout's honor. He is not.

*The name Clem is not used anywhere in Andrews' testimony before Warren Commission, by either Andrews or Wesley Liebeler.

* This portion is not included in NBC's own transcript, p. 25.
