Aleksei I. Adzhubei, son-inlaw of Nikita S. Khrushchev
and former editor of Izvestia, played an incidental role in making the home motion pictures that the National Broadcasting Company will show next Tuesday in the first television interview with the former Premier of the Soviet Union. Union.

Negotiations with Mr. Khru-shchev and his family were conducted by a Russian citizen who is the correspondent for a number of Western journalistic media.

The Khrushchev interview is not a conventional synchronized TV program. The home movies were shot at one time in Mr. Khrushchev's dacha west of Moscow and then a tape-recorded sound commentary was added.

It was understood Monday that while Mr. Adzhubei had been peripherally involved in the television project, other members of Mr. Khrushchev's family had been more deeply involved in the venture.

In the interview, Mr. Khrushchev avoids all references to the present Soviet leadership and discusses only matters during his own regime, which ending his own regime, which ended in 1964.

N.B.C.'s success in obtaining the Khrushchev home movies which will be supplemented by background newsreel material, was seen as a further journalwas seen as a further journal-istic coup for Mrs. Lucy Jarvis, executive producer of the pro-gram, who has prevailed on many Soviet Government offi-cials to cooperate with her network.

Mrs. Jarvis, who has just returned from Moscow, made a point of extending hospitality to Mr. Adzhubei when he visited the United States. She is known for her refusal to be impressed by bureaucratic red tape and frequently has swept past her masculine competitors in television.

Financial arrangements for Financial arrangements for the Khrushchev interview con-tinue to remain obscure. N.B.C. dealt directly with the Russian citizen, who, in turn, reached his own understanding with the 73-year-old former Premier.

Since disclosure of the Khrushchev interview on June 26, N.B.C. has been besieged with bids to reprint the full text of the transcript abroad.
