'Demagogic' Views Blamed by Reagan For Most Violence

SACRAMENTO, Calif., June
11—Gov. Ronald Reagan declared today that "in most instances" violence and lawbreaking in this country had been encouraged by "demagogic" statements.

But, at his weekly news conference, he specifically excluded from his criticism the words of Senator Robert F. Kennedy in his Presidential campaign in the last few weeks before his assassination.

"I think if you review what Senator Kennedy had been saying, he had been advocating just the opposite, law and order, and getting together and healing of the divisions and wounds between people and trying for peaceful settlement," the Governor said.

A reporter interjected, "Yet only a couple of weeks ago, Governor, in a law and order statement, you quoted Senator Kennedy directly and verbatim as an example of demagogic and irresponsible words of so-called leaders." He asked whom the Governor had been talking about.

"I didn't keep a bibliog-called leaders." He asked whom the Governor had been talking about.

"I didn't keep a bibliography," Mr. Reagan replied. "I think if you'll go back a number of years you will find over the last decade repeated statements of prominent people that did encourage and could be interpreted by those hearing them as encouraging them into violence with regard to dissent, taking literally the law into their own hands, encouraging all the way from civil disobedience on up to these more violent demonstrations. I suggest if you want to compile a list of the names you go back and look for some of them."

The Governor said he was concerned that people would look for "the easy answers" to violence. "There is a kind of oversimplification leading the public down the road to believe that all that is needed is better control of guns," he said.
