

5 January 1971

Dear Hal:

Herewith another batch of stuff from Weisberg. The thing presumably needing your most immediate attention is the dupe copy of the letter to us beginning "Dear friends:"

^{you}
As/readily can imagine, much of this is getting way beyond us, both in terms of our background necessary for full understanding of what he is talking about, and in terms of the time and resources we have available to deal with it.

I have finally tumbled to the reason he is sending us all this stuff: it's simply because he doesn't know your address, and one reason he doesn't know it is that all along I have assumed you would be writing to him at any moment and would provide it yourself. In the meantime we both also assumed that if you weren't writing to him it would be for your own reasons, and because of this I have consciously refrained lately from providing your address to him. As you can see, however, things are getting to a point where I no longer can appear merely to be forgetting to provide it, so something will have to be done. I shall probably write him a brief note acknowledging receipt of all this stuff within the next few days, and if for any reason you would rather I didn't give him your new address please give us a call at any hour and say so.

Not able now to take time for more. I suppose you know that Shaw's perjury trial has been set for Jan. 18 by Judge O'Hara. It will be interesting to see whether there is any further stalling, and how much. Also, Alcock has been named a Criminal Court Judge to take Haggerty's place.

Along with Weisberg, we assume that if you haven't found other work you will soon be into your former winter job, if you haven't already begun it. Do let us know how you're doing.

Best from us both,

jdw