In the early morning of Sunday, November 12, 1967, a very interesting conversation occurred on Jim Eason's radio program. Stan Primmer tells me that a man phoned the station and asked to speak to Harold Weisberg who was present as a guest. The caller stated ~~XXXX~~ he had trained at No Name Key prior to the Cuban invasion. Weisberg asked him if the name Jerry Patrick was familiar. The caller responded in the affirmative, and cited the name Patrick Henry. (I gather that "Jerry Patrick" and "Patrick Henry" are one and the same.) Many other intriguing exchanges took place.

Did you record the conversation I previously cited? If so, would you send me a transcription of the discourse between Weisberg and the man who trained at No Name Key? I realize how time consuming it is to transcribe ~~XXXX~~ a conversation from electronically sensitive tape to the written word. I'd be perfectly willing to prepare a transcript if you send me a tape-recorded ✓of the original.
