

Kissinger Guarded Heavily in London

London

U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger arrived in London yesterday for delicate talks with British leaders, his visit wrapped in massive security precautions as a result of a death threat.

British policemen and American guards with sub-machine guns threw a cordon around Kissinger's plane and he was taken from the airport as soon as it touched down.

Police sources said security arrangements for Kissinger were more elaborate than anything that had been ordered for past visits by President Nixon.

The heavy guard came in response to a request from Washington, where the State Department said it had received information that death threats had been made against Kissinger.

State Department spokesmen, saying "we had to take it seriously," refused to say whether the plot involved Palestinian guerrillas.

The secretary of state, on a tour of Europe and the Middle East, flew in from Brussels where he attended a meeting of foreign ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Kissinger will meet Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home this morning and afterward will lunch with Prime Minister Edward Heath.

The major problem for Kissinger in his talks will be to mend the Anglo-American rift caused by differing poli-

Women Can't Dine With Henry

LONDON

Because there are three women among the reporters traveling with Secretary of State Henry Kissinger on his European tour, an Anglo-American friendship society will not invite the press to dinner with Kissinger at the society's home tonight.

Instead, it was disclosed yesterday, the press will be invited by the Pilgrims Society only for coffee and liqueurs after the dinner.

The women traveling with the Kissinger press corps are Marilyn Berger of the Washington Post, Charlotte Saikowski of the Christian Science Monitor and Marie Koenig, of the U.S. Information Agency.

Their presence in the press party caused an- guished debate among members of the Pilgrim Society, where women are not admitted to dinner.
