

WHITE HOUSE WEDDING

One rainy afternoon in a rose garden

A June wedding in Washington gave luster to the flayed institution of marriage. The rain stopped falling on the White House lawn just in time for the master of the house to escort his daughter to the Rose Garden altar. Twenty minutes later, Tricia Nixon was Mrs. Edward Cox, the wife of a Harvard Law School student. Then the rains resumed.

Radiant bride and proud papa danced for the 400 invited guests (below) with an easy grace born of years of practice. During the summer of 1957 (right), when she was 11 and he was Vice-President, she had danced with him (with somewhat less assurance) on the Starlight Roof of the Waldorf-Astoria.

2158

31 Dec 71

