An exclusive Gallup Poll tells why Nixon is a shoo-in this November.

Tricky Dick Nixon, "used-car salesman" extraordinaire, has been magically transformed by four years in the White House.

According to a poll done for Newsweek by the Gallup Organization, nearly half of all voters think that Richard Nixon is "very close" or "fairly close" to their idea of what a President should be. In addition, it is McGovern who comes across as "a politician," and Nixon as a "wise, warm, sincere, principled, even a fun-loving leader of men."

Even more surprisingly, the poll shows that Nixon has a solid hold on some traditionally Democratic power blocs: blue-collar workers, the South, Catholics. Even voters aged 18 to 29 support the President over McGovern, 48% to 44%. (This nine-page convention report begins on page 16.)

The end of the Paraguayan connection.
