

PEOPLE

Julie would rather not look at her old home

By Carl Winston

FOOD DIDN'T PLAY AN IMPORTANT part in the life style of the Richard Nixon family, according to Julie Nixon Eisenhower. "Generally what we had when we were children was spaghetti, chicken or meat loaf," she says in a TV interview soon to be shown.

The recent author of a cookbook for children, Julie said her knowledge of cuisine was acquired only after her marriage to David Eisenhower.

The former president's daughter injected a somewhat poignant note into the interview when she admitted that, although she now lives only five minutes from the White House, she avoids looking at her onetime home when she's in the neighborhood.

•