Court Action Is Barred on 'Radical' List

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14 (AP)—The House formally prohibited today the courts or anyone else from obstructing the printing and public distribution of its revised report on 57 alleged campus "radical orators."

The House resolution banning court or any other action against a House Internal Security Committee report, a substitute for one that was enjoined from official public distribution by a Federal judge, was passed by a vote of 302 to 54.

An effort to kill the resolution was defeated, 301 to 55.

The chairman of the committee, Representative Richard H. Ichord, Democrat of Missouri, accused Judge Gerhard A. Gesell of Federal District Court here of suppressing a legislative report for the first time in English and American history and called on the House to "assert and defend" Congress's power over its own business.

"I have never considered this report to be of earth-shaking significance," Mr. Ichord told the House. "But the decision of Judge Gesell is one of earth-shaking significance."

Confrontation Seen

Representative Abner J. Mikva, Democrat of Illinois, said the action could force a "disastrous" confrontation between the courts and Congress that he said "statesmen have been trying to avoid for 200 years."

But Mr. Ichord said the purpose of issuing a new report on campus speakers, rather than seeking the House ban against court interference with the original report, was to avoid just such a confrontation.

He said Judge Gesell, who called the original report an unconstitutional "blacklist" of the speakers and prohibited its official distribution, refused last week to extend that prohibition to the new report.

The motion to kill Mr. Ichord's resolution was made by Representative Louis Stokes, Democrat of Ohio, a member of Mr. Ichord's committee. Mr. Stokes contended that the purpose of the report was to "stultify campus discussion."

The resolution orders the public printer and the House superintendent of documents to print and distribute the report and prohibits anyone from any act that "restrains, delays, interferes with, obstructs or prevents" that work.

The report identifies 57 campus speakers as members or supporters of militant, revolutionary or Communist organizations. It says the $102,668 paid them for 142 campus speeches indicates that the campus speaking circuit is a significant revenue source for promoters of revolutionary and disorderly activities.
